SEASON ENDS

The Astros' Game 4 come-from-behind victory ended Boston's season yesterday afternoon. 12

WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

JOE PANTORNO, NYC SPORTS EDITOR

It's all finished at Fenway. The Houston Astros' late come-from-behind victory on Monday afternoon eliminated the Red Sox from the playoffs, clinching the ALDS, 3 games to 1. The loss is an especially painful one considering the Sox held a lead going into the eighth inning.

For an in-depth look, go to page 12.

TRUMP'S POPULARITY IS DOWN IN RURAL AMERICA

According to the Reuters/Ipsos daily tracking poll, the Republican president's popularity is eroding in small towns and rural communities where 15 percent of the country's population lives. The poll of more than 15,000 adults in "non-metro" areas shows that they are now as likely to disapprove of Trump as they are to approve of him. In September, 47 percent of people in non-metro areas approved of Trump while 47 percent disapproved. That is down from Trump's first four weeks in office, when 55 percent said they approved of the president while 39 percent disapproved. The poll found that Trump has lost support in rural areas among men, whites and people who never went to college. He lost support with rural Republicans and rural voters who supported him on Election Day.

MICHIGAN TO CHARGE TOP MEDICAL OFFICIAL

Michigan's top medical official will be charged with involuntary manslaughter for her role in the city of Flint's water crisis, which was linked to an outbreak of Legionnaires' disease that caused at least 12 deaths, state prosecutors said. Dr. Eden Wells, the state's chief medical executive who already faced lesser charges, would become the sixth current or former official to face involuntary manslaughter charges in connection with the crisis. The state intends to add involuntary manslaughter and misconduct in office to the other charges of obstruction of justice and lying to police that Wells already faces, a spokeswoman for Michigan Attorney General Bill Schuette said. Jerold Lax, an attorney for Wells, said he first learned of the proposed additional charges at a pretrial hearing on Monday.

5 THINGS YOU NEED TO KNOW

BRITAIN, EU CLASH OVER NEXT BREXIT MOVE

4 Britain and its EU partners clashed over which side should make the next move to unblock Brexit talks, despite concerns they will miss a deadline for a divorce deal and that London is heading for a departure. Prime Minister Theresa May made clear in a speech she delivered to parliament that she hoped her EU partners would make proposals at a round of talks opening the way to the next stage of negotiations, saying "the ball is in their court". But even before she had delivered her address, an EU spokesman hit back in Brussels, saying "the ball is entirely in the U.K. court for the rest to happen." May is desperate to try to regain some of her authority and refocus on talks to unravel 40 years of union after a speech at her party conference last week, marred by a repetitive cough, a prankster and a stage malfunction, left her weaker than ever.

GOOGLE UNCOVERED RUSSIA-BACKED ADS

5 Google has discovered Russian operatives spent tens of thousands of dollars on ads on its YouTube, Gmail and Google Search products in an effort to meddle in the 2016 U.S. presidential election, a person briefed on the company's probe told Reuters. The ads do not appear to be from the same Kremlin-affiliated entity that bought ads on Facebook Inc., but may indicate a broader Russian online disinformation effort, according to the source, who was not authorized to discuss details of Google's confidential investigation. The revelation is likely to fuel further scrutiny of the role that Silicon Valley technology giants may have unwittingly played during last year's election. U.S. intelligence agencies have concluded that Moscow's goal was to help elect Donald Trump.

POLL

According to the Pew Research Center, nearly 50 percent of the approximately 11 million undocumented immigrants living in the U.S. last year resided in three states: California, with 2.35 million; Texas, with 1.65 million; and Florida, with 850,000.

This year, many HUBweek events will take place at The HUB, an installation at City Hall seen in this rendering. PROVIDED BY HUBWEEK

Free events to check out at HUBweek

HUBweek is happening in Boston this week with events focused on technology, science and art.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Boston is ripe with tech innovations and events, especially this week as the city marks the third annual HUBweek Festival, a six-day showcase on the intersection of art, science and technology.

HUBweek bills itself as "Greater Boston's festival for the future" and the future is now. The festival starts Tuesday, Oct. 10, and goes until Oct. 15, featuring more than 175 events.

"Boston is a center of innovation and creative thinking and events like HUBweek showcase some of the best Boston has to offer," Boston Mayor Marty Walsh said. "I look forward to welcoming the third HUBweek to our city, and encourage our residents to take advantage of these engaging events."

HUBweek, which was founded by the Boston Globe, Harvard, Massachusetts General Hospital and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, tackles everything from artificial intelligence to architecture through talks, interactive workshops, tours and even out-of-this-world meditation sessions. Here are a few free things worth checking out this week.

"Walk a Mile" Poverty Simulation

We all know the idiom that advises that before you criticize someone, you should walk a mile in their shoes. This HUBweek event lets you do just that. For the two-hour simulation, you live out the role of a family member for five "days" dealing with the stressors of poverty, whether it is a parent working three jobs or a child who can't get to school if they miss the bus. Oct. 10, 4:00 to 6:30 p.m.

Twilight: Exploring the Unconscious Mind

If you've had surgery, you've probably been put under anesthesia. Massachusetts General Hospital was the first to use ether as anesthesia in 1846. This event looks at how medicine was changed forever by that move, and how it will continue to advance, especially in light of how progress in anesthesiology research may help combat the opioid epidemic. Oct. 11, 6:00 to 7:30 p.m.

The Harvard Yard Archaeology Project Experienced in Augmented Reality

Recent excavations on Harvard's campus explored the 17th through 19th century lives of students and faculty who worked in Harvard Yard. If you missed those, this augmented reality application will let you explore the excavations and artifacts recovered. Oct. 11, 2:30 to 3:30 p.m.

Stories Under the Stars

Hear true stories, "both personal and inspired by science," according to the event page, on the theme "light in the dark," as you sit beneath the cosmos at the Museum of Science's Charles Hayden Planetarium. There are three of these events, all of which will use live storytelling, radio and music. Oct. 13, 4:00 p.m., Oct. 14, 4:30 p.m., Oct. 15, 10:15 a.m.

Robot Block Party

Robots are everywhere, like in our cars, our homes and our warehouses. This showcase at City Hall brings together than 20 robots so you can interact with them, watch product demos and learn about the "Massachusetts robotics ecosystem." Oct. 15, 11:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

I am standing on a hillside behind a cafeteria in Killeen, Texas. It is past midnight yet the lights inside are blazing. Earlier, a man drove his pickup through one of the windows, stepped out and shot 23 people to death. Long white curtains cover the crime scene, but the wind is pushing them out through the smashed glass. With each gust, they fill, rise and open to reveal the chaos of tipped tables and chairs, dropped plates and blood. Then they close again. It is October 1991 — 26 years ago this month — and the massacre is widely reported as the worst in modern American history.

Of course, we've had plenty of mass shootings since I became a national news correspondent and I've had some role in covering most of them: Las Vegas, Orlando, Blacksburg, Newtown, San Bernardino, Ft. Hood, Binghamton, Once, it was horribly personal. My wife, our two small daughters and I lived a few miles from Columbine High School. I covered those shootings from dawn each day until deep in the night for a month. At home in the wee hours, my wife and I would talk about the victims, the survivors we knew, and we would cry. Then I'd go back to work.

That was also the worst shooting in its day. Then there was Virginia Tech. A new worst. Then Sandy Hook Elementary. Another worst. Then the Pulse nightclub. Again, the worst. The truth is, I've been involved in covering so many of these "worst" shootings, I've

Because as much as we gather to pray, light candles and recite the names of the dead as a community, I know from experience that the suffering is always personal — that each victim, whether killed alone or amid dozens, is individually mourned, missed and cried for in endless nights of lonely sorrow.

And that really is the worst.

Celebs react to Harvey Weinstein

Last week, the New York Times released an expose, detailing sexual harassment allegations against Harvey Weinstein. And Hollywood's best (and Hollywood's — UGH, you're still here?) are not having it.

After The Weinstein Co. announced that they had ousted the 65-year-old — whom then-attorney Lisa Bloom described as “an old dinosaur learning new ways,” ew — a bunch of famous people took to social media, et al. to show support for Weinstein's accusers. Here's what they had to say.

“Whenever [Weinstein] would come up in conversation, there was always this ‘ick’ or ‘ugh’ [reaction].”
— Ryan Murphy, man who blessed/cursed us with “American Horror Story”

Some of Hollywood's best and most mediocre have spoken.
ALL IMAGES GETTY IMAGES

“As always, I stand with the brave survivors of sexual assault and harassment. It's not your fault. I believe you.”
— Brie Larson, baby girl who is historically woker than woke

“The disgraceful news about Harvey Weinstein has appalled those of us whose work he championed, and those whose good and worthy causes he supported... The behavior is inexcusable, but the abuse of power familiar.”
— Meryl Streep, who should just be president now probably

“I'm sick of the media demanding only women speak up. What about the men? Perhaps many are afraid to look at their own behavior.”
— Jessica Chastain, woke bae

“H Weinstein -yikes! Disgusting and creepy. So is ‘leader of the free world’ btw.”
— Michael Keaton, the only Batman I will ever recognize. Bonus points for the Donald Trump burn, dude.

“The ‘old dinosaur’ explanation doesn't cut it. DECADES of using power to intimidate women for sexual gain is reprehensible and inexcusable.”
— Emmy Rossum, potentially my new fave

“Easy to think Weinstein company took swift action, but this has actually been the slowest action because they always knew.”
— Lena Dunham, y'all's fave, making a good point

“To be clear what Harvey Weinstein did was a disgusting abuse of power and horrible. I hope we are now seeing the beginning of the end of these abuses.”
— Mark Ruffalo, lifelong zaddy

Kim Kardashian has body dysmorphia

Kim Kardashian has heard whispers in the Hall of the Dead (aka Twitter). I'm talking about Twitter), shaming her for her body. And finally, she has a reply.

she explains, “You take pictures, and if they're not perfect, people just body shame you and criticize you. For people to just think that's OK is so frustrating.”

The 36-year-old admitted on Sunday night's episode of KUTWK that she suffers from body dysmorphia because y'all won't stop shaming her. I guess constant public scrutiny has its bad side, or whatever.

Discussing those pictures of her vacationing in Mexico — where her butt looks really fake —

“I can't have fun after seeing those pics,” she continues. “It's just wild, because there's other pics where I look so good, and it's just from a different angle. It's like, literally giving me body dysmorphia. People think I'm so confident and I'm so secure, and I'm not. I'm so insecure.”
Oh, you sweet summer child.

Angelina real-life warlord bait

Picture it: a show that's like “To Catch a Predator,” but instead it's called, “To Catch a Ugandan Warlord Named Joseph Kony, Featuring Angelina Jolie.”

According to leaked International Criminal Court documents, Jolie volunteered to be a central part of a 2012 plot to lure warlord Kony into arrest.

According to the documents, Luis Moreno Ocampo — the ICC's chief prosecutor from years 2003 to 2012 — wrote to Jolie and her assistant that he had “the idea to invite Kony to dinner and then arrest him.” In another email, he wrote “Forget other celebrities, she is the one... She is ready. Probably Brad [Pitt] will also go.” Ah yes, the classic honey-pot, featuring Benjamin Button himself. Anyway, the plan never came to fruition and thank Dumbledore. If you're anything like me — which if you are, sorry — actress turned humanitarian turned world savior is a bit much to handle.

Grant Gustin on making 'The Flash' fun again

The actor behind Barry Allen on how the new season is bringing humor — and heart — back.

LUCIA HERNÁNDEZ
MWN
letters@metro.us

"The Flash" is back and possibly better than ever. At least according to Grant Gustin. The Virginia native who plays the titular superhero — aka Barry Allen — promises this season will go back to a lighter note.

"Last year we moved away from humor and I think that will be the darkest thing that we will do with the show," he says. "We are going to have lots of fun and we'll return to comedy, especially as the season continues."

Ahead of the CW series' season premiere, airing tonight at 8 p.m., we chatted with the 27-year-old about the Flash's new suit, avoiding

Grant Gustin promises a lighter season this year, one that prioritizes both heart and humor. DEAN BUSCHER/THE CW his own stunts and racing with fans.

How will this season compare with the last?
Our writers have said from the beginning that "The Flash" is based on the three H's: heart, humor and heroism, in that order. This season definitely has the potential to be our best season, because we really stick to comedy without leaving the heart of things and the relationships. There will be a lot of Barry and Iris this season, there's a lot more to Barry and Joe this season, so we're going back to basics and having fun with the show.

And it doesn't hurt that the Flash has a new suit.
It's closer to what we've seen in the comics. He still doesn't have the yellow boots, but he has a yellow or goldish accent around the boot, they've also made the red brighter.

One thing that is funny is that, the Flash emblem is just Velcro, and it moves all the time and falls then sometimes we have to stop or repeat a take because you can see [it].

Do you do a lot of your own stunts?

Well, I try, you know, but they don't let me do anything dangerous. I've done some semi-fun stuff. During the first two [seasons], which were the most fun, I was allowed to wear the harness. There was a very cool pull that threw me on to the floor where I fell standing. It was a lot of fun to do.

Do you find it difficult, then, to be a superhero?

For me, from the beginning of "The Flash" until now, it has always been about the work, preparing myself to do the best I can and have fun. My life has definitely changed — being Flash for the last three years has kept me very busy. Now I live in Canada and talk to pretty people, most of the time and it's part of the job.

So if some fans are in Canada, what's the best way to approach you? Do people usually crack a joke?

Yes, I've heard the same jokes many times. They're always speed jokes. [Laughs] People ask me to run with them and the truth is that, since the series began, I've only ran a competition with three people, two people from the staff and with a friend and I ran with them because I was sure that I'd beat them.

You think they let you win just because you're the Flash?

Maybe, but I think I could have still won them anyway. [Laughs]

Local ramen lovers will have a new spot to slurp up noodles this fall thanks to Pabu Boston.

The Izakaya-style Japanese restaurant, located at Millennium Tower, will transform into the Ramen Bar pop-up on Sunday evenings. The pop-up pays tribute to San Francisco's Ramen Bar, a popular fast casual concept created by chefs Ken Tominaga and Michael Mina, who also happens to be the masterminds behind Pabu.

The temporary set-up hopes to highlight the Ramen Bar's blend of California and Japanese cuisine. The pop-up will feature a limited ramen and sushi rolls menu, using Tominaga-inspired ramen recipes designed by executive chef Ben Steigers.

"Ramen is one of my all-time favorite foods and one of the best ways to experience a traditional Japanese meal," Steigers said in a statement. "There are so many flavors it can bring to life; I cannot wait to experiment."

The Ramen Bar pop-up won't be your typical dining experience, as the takeover will also feature hip-hop music, plus drink specials such as beer buckets and some enticing "mix and match" boilermakers.

Guests will get the chance to choose from a trio of noodle options, including the light and delicate shio ramen, the darker and ricker shoyu ramen and mazemen ramen, a brothless-style option featuring garlic sauce. Pork chashu and fried pork gyoza can also

The Ramen Bar pop-up at Pabu Boston is expected to run through November.

Eric O'Grey details his transformation in a new memoir, "Walking with Peety."

In 2010, 51-year-old Eric O'Grey weighed 320 pounds and took over 15 different medications to manage his type-2 diabetes, high blood pressure, cholesterol and depression. The Silicon Valley-based sales rep did most of his job over the phone, working from home and rarely leaving the house.

"It was a day-to-day existence of me and myself and really, the phone and the internet," remembers O'Grey, now 58. He subsisted on what he calls a "window diet," only eating what was delivered to his home or the car door, sometimes consuming up to 10,000 calories in one sitting. As he gained more and more weight, his clothes no longer fit and eventually he stopped going outside altogether. He lost contact with his friends and hadn't gone on a date in 15 years.

O'Grey's breaking point came when a doctor told him to purchase a cemetery plot because he'd likely need one in the next five years. He scheduled bariatric surgery, but as a last-ditch effort, made an appointment with a naturopathic doctor. Dr. Preeti Kulkarni didn't write O'Grey any new scripts, but she did prescribe him a plant-based diet — and told him to get a rescue dog.

O'Grey went to the Humane Society Silicon Valley and adopted Peety, an obese, middle-aged Australian Shepherd/Border Collie mix, whom he picked out "so we would have something in common." With a new companion to love and take care of, now O'Grey had to leave the house. The two went on half-hour walks twice a day, soon building up to 2 to 3 miles, and within four months, O'Grey got off his meds and reversed his diabetes. In 10 months, he had lost about 150 pounds, dropping from 320 to 185. Peety even lost 25. In no time, O'Grey joined a running club and today averages five marathons a year.

O'Grey has documented his transformation in a memoir, "Walking with Peety: The Dog Who Saved My Life," out Oct. 10 on Grand Central Life & Style.

But before the book deal, O'Grey first told his story in 2016 in a video for MutualRescue.org, an initiative by the Silicon Valley Humane Society to share transformations between shelter dogs and their owners. "Eric & Peety" is the ultimate "who rescued whom" story, but make sure you have the Kleenex handy: Peety doesn't live to tell the tale. He passed away from cancer in 2015.

Luckily, there's another upswing. When the video went viral, O'Grey received an outpouring of emails and Facebook friend requests. But one person who reached out made a lasting impression: his high school sweetheart, Jaye. Although the two hadn't spoken in 40 years, they instantly reconnected. They married in December of 2016.

And there's a new canine love in the picture, too. Eric and Jaye now live in Boise, Idaho, along with Jake, a rescue black Lab and O'Grey's ultimate running partner. The two average 30 to 50 miles a week and run half-marathons together.

Sox season ends in ALDS again

The Astros' Game 4 come-from-behind victory ended Boston's season on Monday afternoon.

JOE PANTORNO
@JoePantorno
joseph.pantorno@metro.us

For the second-straight season, the Boston Red Sox have crashed out of the ALDS after dropping Game 4 of the series to the Houston Astros 5-4 on Monday afternoon at Fenway Park and losing the best-of-five series 3-1.

Josh Reddick's RBI single in the top of the eighth broke a 3-3 tie and Carlos Beltran's ninth-inning double proved to be the game-winner in a come-from-behind effort that saw Boston nab a 3-2 lead in the fifth.

The Red Sox pulled within one during their last turn at bat thanks to a thrilling inside-the-park home run by Rafael Devers, but it wasn't enough for a franchise that has won just a single postseason game since 2014.

This was Houston's first postseason series win since the 2005 NLCS.

In what could have been his final game as Red Sox manager, John Farrell was ejected in the bottom of the second for arguing balls and strikes, leaving bench coach Gary DiSarcina in charge.

Boston's decision to leave in ace pitcher Chris Sale — who was on the hill to relieve starter Rick Porcello — in the eighth inning will haunt the team all winter. Though we'll never know how Farrell actually would have handled the situation had he been in the dugout.

Porcello put his team behind immediately in the first inning, making it the fourth-straight game in the series that Houston scored in the opening frame.

After a lead-off double to George Springer, who advanced to third on a wild pitch, Josh Reddick walked to immediately put the Sox in a jam. But the damage was limited when Jose Altuve grounded into an RBI double play.

Xander Bogaerts knotted things back up quickly in the bottom of the first when he took Charlie Morton out to straightaway center field. It was a huge way to break out of a 0-for-14 slump through the first three games of the series.

Porcello gave it right back though after a lead-off triple to Yuli Gurriel in the second. He was close to getting out of it unscathed after striking out Evan Gattis and Brian McCann, but Springer lined a single to left to put Houston back in the lead.

Desperate to keep the game within reach, the acting manager called upon Sale to come on in relief in the fourth inning.

He was dominant for the first four innings, allowing two hits while striking out six.

The Astros countered by bringing in a big arm of their own in Justin Verlander, who was called on in the fifth inning after Morton allowed a one-out walk to Bogaerts.

It was a questionable move considering Verlander had never made a relief appearance in his career.

The move didn't pay off as Andrew Benintendi greeted Verlander with a moonshot of a home run into the right-field stands to put Boston in the lead.

But Sale was left in the game for just a bit too long as he came out for the eighth inning. Facing Alex Bregman, who homered off Sale in Game 1, the lefty gave up another over the monster to tie the game.

After a Gattis single, Sale's day was done as closer Craig Kimbrel was called on, though he couldn't get the job done. A wild pitch and a walk to Springer put runners on the corners with two outs for Reddick, who slapped a single the other way through the hole at shortstop to put Houston back in front.

The Astros bats kept humming in the ninth thanks to Beltran's marathon at-bat against Kimbrel that resulted in an RBI double to grab an insurance run that proved to be enormous for the visitors after Devers led off the bottom of the ninth with an inside-the-park home run. A line drive to left center could not be wrangled in by the Springer as the ball caromed off the wall and rolled toward right field.

Houston closer Ken Giles though was able to retire the next three batters, finishing off Boston's season by getting Dustin Pedroia to ground out.

Brady's been poised under pressure in 2017

The New England legend isn't mobile, but he's still been solid when his pocket collapses.

JIMMY TOSCANO
@MetroBOS
sports@metro.us

It's no secret that the New England Patriots go as Tom Brady goes.

Yes, football is a team sport and all 11 players out on the field are important, but we know that it's a quarterback-driven league, and Brady has been leading the charge for years.

That said, a quarterback can only be as good as his offensive line allows him to be. If he doesn't have the protection in front of him, he better be mobile or the pressure will lead to hurried throws and sacks.

Brady is a lot of things, but mobile isn't one of them.

While his pocket presence is up there with the best of them, the pocket has been collapsing far too quickly these days. Overall, Brady hasn't let it negatively affect his play, as he had a NFL-best QB rating of 138.5 while under pressure heading into the Bucs game, but things changed in a hurry — literally.

Brady was under pressure on a season-high 40 percent of his dropbacks against Tampa Bay and he completed just five of his 13 attempts for 60 yards under pressure, according to Pro Football Focus.

He was sacked three times, bringing his season total to 16. To put that into perspective, Brady was sacked a total of 15 times over 12 games in 2016. That year he was sacked on 10.4-percent of plays under pressure. This year, according to Pro Football Focus, that rate has more than doubled to 21 percent, the 12th highest rate in the league.

New England Patriots quarterback Tom Brady has seen an uptick in pressure, but he's still slinging it. GETTY IMAGES

He's on pace to be sacked around 50 times this year, which would be a career-high. Not exactly what you want to put your 40-year-old quarterback through, even if he is Mr. Pliability.

So what's the problem? The hope is that more time and continuity will strengthen the line and allow Brady the time necessary to get his offense going. The offense has become more vertical this year than in years past and may require him to hold the ball in the pocket longer than usual.

Against the Bucs, much of the pressure on Brady came from the left side, where tackle Nate Solder and guard Joe Thuney struggled at points, allowing 11 of the 19 pressures on the night, according to PFF. Unfortunately, that's been a trend from that side early on this season.

Solder missed the majority of camp and all four preseason games due to injury. Though he did start Week 1 and has started all five regular season games, it could be that he's not fully healthy or not yet where he needs to be. His play was enough to get CBS color analyst Tony Romo to question Solder's health on the Thursday night broadcast.

Despite the uncharacteristic play, Patriots coaches are not pointing fingers at any one particular player, instead

"I think Nate battles a lot of the best players in the league over there at left tackle," offensive coordinator Josh McDaniels told reporters on Monday. "He's done it for a long time. Just like every player, there's going to be some plays that could you improve on them? Sure, but there's a lot of good plays, too. It's a team thing. All our guys, all our coaches, our players, we're all trying to improve and get better."
